Dungeon Wherein Laborers are Cast to Breathe a Sickening Steach and Contract Disease. Today a leutenant of The Carrier Capitol cres had occasion to visit the folding-room of the House. He entered the office of the Door-keeper, on the ground floor, inquired for the storcead place, and was pointed to a narrow, tark stairway leading to the floor yet below a place properly known in the rural vernace-lar as the cellar. The lynx-epel young man of literary ambition started down. At the landing of the first flight of stops A Chilling Blast of Foul Air struck him amidships, and rushing down his gangway froze and sickened him clear to the hold. He buttoned up his Prince Albert, and recoiling but a moment from the uncomfort-able breeze, started further down the stairway. The next change of atmosphere was in the shape of a haussous edor in the form of tobocce smoke—a smell of smoke manutac-tured from a strong clay pipe a month or two ago; a kind of revolting seent that hovers about and clings to places where there is no ventilation like grim death. A Dark Passage-Way Filled with Steam and Stink of a still greater variegated character. Here was waited a swiell of sour paste, mildewed paper and vault offal. Farther on and huge piles of books were passed, and the writer stepped into a long tunnel about ten feet wide, with a ceiling probably seven bed high. This was brilliantly illuminated with gas, the walls of stone and brick; and ceilings were white with wash. Along the stdes of the tunnel were tables, and on the tables were piles of books, pamphicus, etc. Seated upon stools sat a numerous body of men and boys folding and pasting these official documents. Documents were piled about in confusion. Paper was strown overtywhere, in the rush of work. A dainly doorway at the west and of the tunnel shed a wee hit of loof's light, otherwise all was gastight.

A Death-Dealing Stench

A Death-Dealing Stench was waited everywhere. There was no ventilation. The tunnels in which forty-two men and boys were hard at work are warmed by the usual pipes, and these pipes, instead of being placed on the cold, damp ground to warm the feet and dispol dampness, are placed along the ceilings, so as to keep the head hot and the feet cold. The escaping steam, the foul smell from the different articles used in the work, the absence of natural light and ventilation, the cramped condition of the tunnels, the bad arrangement for ineuting, were all seen at a glance, and inquiry was made of a brace of workmen engaged in piling books into a dark adjacent passage-way as to the healthfulness of the place.

The Event of the Season at Mount Pleasant.

The second party and sociable of the season was given last night at Union Hall, Mount was given last night at Union Hall, Mount Fleasant, under the management of D. E. McEhlinny, T. B. Nichels and Ed. F. Murdock. On this occasion, however, the attractions were many and great, and the inducements held out by the managers were too tempting to be resisted even by the most retized. The supper was prepared in the most excellent style, but how could it be otherwise when gotten up for the occasion by the ladies themselves. Dancing was kept up until morning, and to give the anmes of all would simply be to copy the village directory. Knox's Electric Express furnished the necessary conveyance for the city guests, and when the party broke up the following familiar faces were noticed: Misses

The third and last solree of the O. B. S. C. was given at the residence of Mr. P. Pellard, No. 1517 Vermontavenue northwest, last evening, and was a most enjoyable affair. The young gentiemen of the club made great efforts to have everything arranged for the comfort and enjoyment of their guests. The large double pariors were used for dancing. Excellent music was in attendance, and the young ladies and gentiemen enjoyed dancing by its sweet strains until supper was announced at Public School Teachers' Salarics.

The teachers' committee met yesterday. The subcommittee reported that among the gentlemen interviewed on the salary question was flepresentative J. H. Retcham, who kindly promised his best endeavors to secure the passage of the District Appropriation bill amended to allow the appropriation yet unexpended to be used to pay the teachers accordio the schedule on which they were paid from September to February. The belief was expressed that all the teachers would be paid within two weeks their full salaries as usual. The committee, on behalf of the teachers, unanimously passed a voic of thanks to depart Retcham. As showing the fratornal feeling among the teachers, Trustee Loveloy has been notified that the teachers, as body, prefer to wait until all can receive their just dues, rather than to allow the twenty-six new teachers to be cut off with nothing. After extending to the teachers congrasulations on the satisfactory results situated, the committee adjourned incentially.

The Sale of the White House Furni

A crowd gathered to-day at the corner of Ninth and D streets, where some old forni-ture, curtains, carpets, etc., that had once been in use at the Executive Mansion, were exposed for sale. Nothing was offered except articles well worn, and considering the condi-tion of the goods, the rates at which they sold, while far from extravagant, were excellen auction prices. The curtains and some of the carpets, with the handsome cords, tassels, balls, etc., were purchased by a theatrical manager for use in one of the city theatres. A manager for use in one of the city theatres. A lot of lace curtains, which would have loaded a cart, sold for $40. A Baltimore merchant was the purchaser. Carpets sold for $10 to $110 each. A set of parlor furniture, 14 pieces, in faded green silk; much frayed and forn, sold for $46. A red silk set, 10 pieces, brought $40. A small set of five pieces sold at $28. Ottomans sold at $2.25 to $6 per set; washstands at $5 to $5.50 each. An old Red Room set sold for $80, and other articles at less prices. This furniture has been stored in the attic of the White Rouse for several years, and much of it has found occupants other than the invited guests of the President. The entire attic lumber room was cleared out for this sale, and the broken bits of caraloes, gas fixtures, etc., with some tables and buffets that came down to us from a former generation exhibited. Furniture of the pre-Lincoln period did not bring high rates, but a few articles from the antique times before Jackson found purchasers at good prices.
